

‘When horrible things happen to us, they leave ‘poisonous memories’ in each of us. And that poison – anger, hatred and revenge – is liable to take control of us, to destroy us, if we keep it inside us. Healing of memories is about acknowledging and laying to rest those things in the past which would destroy us and taking from the past that which is life-giving.’

Michael Lapsley: An Anglican priest, who was involved in combating the injustice of apartheid in South Africa. In 1990, he was the victim of a parcel bomb attack, in which he lost both hands. After the fall of the apartheid regime, realising that South Africa was still a ‘deeply divided and wounded society’, he founded the Institute for Healing of Memories in 1998 (*).

What is a Healing of Memories workshop?

Each of us has a story to tell. And every story needs to be heard. Our lives have been marked by events, some of them rather painful. Childhood trauma, unfair treatment, violence conflict, grief ... Some recent events, in particular during the current Covid-19 crisis, may have brought up within us old memories and reopened old wounds.

The healing of memories workshop gives us an opportunity to acknowledge the emotional wounds which we carry, both individually and collectively (within the family, the community, the nation). It also provides a safe space where we can tell our life story in an atmosphere of confidentiality and respect. When my story is shared, acknowledged and revered, I can take one step towards healing personal and interpersonal wounds. There are no observers in these workshops. Everyone participates fully, including the facilitators.

What a few participants in recent workshops in Luxembourg have to say about the experience

'The fear of passing on to my children poisonous memories is something that pursues me and sometimes haunts me. The workshop gave me a chance to start healing those memories and, as a result, to consider forgiveness. For me, it was like discovering an oasis in the desert.'

'The workshop allowed me to heal open and painful wounds that life had inflicted on me. Taking part in it was a first key step that enabled me to get up and move forward with confidence and peace of mind.'
